Foreword

Practical utility, maximum convenience, congenial and pleasing environment should, and can be made characteristic of every home interior. The monotony of household tasks can be relieved if the surroundings are attractive.

Beauty of composition and economy in the use of space and material require careful and competent study, but their realization is no more difficult or expensive than that of inconvenient, poorly arranged, unsightly equipment for the same purpose. The resulting benefit to the home owner is measured not only in dollars, but in greater convenience, esthetic satisfaction, and slower depreciation.

These suggestions for attractive architectural treatments of modern home interiors should assist the householder in solving both the practical and the artistic problem of the interior of the house. They are practicable both for new homes and for existing houses, which need only these few touches to make them modern and convenient.

Wood provides a fascinating variety of surface texture. It is easy of adaptation to home furnishing. Equipment made from it is durable, easily reconditioned, and satisfying. It is a most responsive material in the creation of homes of distinction.

No other single material affords such an infinite variety of decorative effects as wood. In its natural appearance or with transparent finishes, the range of tones, colors, and grain of the different species is a constant source of delight to the eye. Moreover, all the painted, enameled, and lacquered colors, applied on wood attain a softness and warmth unusual with other foundations.

Stains and color finishes, accentuating the grain and texture of the wood, harmonizing with desired background effects without concealing its natural beauty, together with innovations, such as sand etching, make it possible to avoid an impression of stereotyped repetition of what others have put into their homes. Originality can readily be achieved and creative effort is most truly reflected in the modern mode with wood for homes. These are characteristics inherent in no other material.

The suggestions herewith presented are capable of wide variations to meet individual conditions. Each sketch is accompanied by construction details which will ordinarily be found adequate to enable the handy man to build it or furniture of similar character.

The local lumberman and millwork manufacturer can readily produce articles of the kinds shown. They also quite generally have in stock, cupboards and cabinet work of attractive standard designs which can be promptly installed for those who do not care to have them made from special designs.

If the home owner is inspired to create new designs, adapt those here shown to his needs, or finds stock equipment suitable to his requirements, he will enjoy real satisfaction in having put a modern note into his home environment at moderate cost.

Architects and builders will find helpful hints in these designs.
